

Electronic Discovery

Electronic discovery and document management have become critical to the defense and management of complex matters. Irwin Fritchie has significant hands-on experience in the identification, acquisition, analysis, coding, and production of paper documents and electronically stored information. Our team is well versed in the traditional issues of electronic discovery, including confidentiality, privilege, and subject-specific reviews.

Irwin Fritchie has handled intensive projects involving more than 25 million documents, and, due to our level of experience, we regularly expand our analysis beyond traditional reviews to higher-level work, such as the development of broader case themes and tactics based on in-depth document analysis. We offer a dedicated document-management workspace staffed by experienced attorneys and paralegals, and our technological capabilities include case-management systems, litigation databases, document depositories, and extranets, all of which facilitate an effective, efficient, and coordinated defense.
